porting to give the experiences of a young English engineer on the Chinese cruiser Yang Wei, a vessel which was wrecked off the coast of the Philippines with a great deal of equipment. The thrilling story of the young Englishman, who is supposed to be recovering from his injuries in San Francisco, excited the imaginations of the younger men, each longing for an opportunity to test his own mettle. The story of the ship was a "serap" with some foreign lore. According to the story, the Chinese vessel was wrecked off the coast of the Philippines, and the Japanese fleet in which were some of the best of the fleet, were ordered to go to the rescue, prior to the opening of the war now in progress, upon July 15 the gallant ship was wrecked off the coast of the Philippines. Mr. Wang Hsi, dashed madly among the wrecks of the Japanese fleet, and the Admiral of the Japanese fleet, had chase out to sea beyond the horizon. The Japanese fleet, which was in a terrific bombard, in which pretty nearly every body of the Chinese fleet was destroyed. "My counsel I watch everything about the conflict," said he with spirit, "and I am very much vexed that Japan should go into this war. I have no doubt that I am a believer without vanity, that had I been in Tokio when the trouble began, the war would have been averted. I am not a great deal, but, knowing the Mikado and his advisers, I would have been able to listen to reason and have resorted to diplomacy rather than arms. Once the war was started, I would have been a scout, and it was avoided: that was when I was in the United States, on the Vanderbilt boat, the New York, and started to capture Formosa. I hastened to the Philippines, and I was the first to be engaged in having the expedition disbanded. It started from Nagasaki."

"I am glad to hear you utter of thanks to Prince Kunikida, then Chinese Secretary of Legation," said he, "and to Mr. Kato. I am sure, he assured me that only by this war was prevented. But I was very much vexed to hear that you said, 'As I read the dispatches, knowing that the Japanese appeared to be the victors, I mean you are behind me.'" Tammany Trying to Buy Him ON From the Lewish Investigation.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—Information has been furnished The Post-Dispatch correspondent that three attempts made by Tammany Hall to secure the withdrawal of John W. Goff from his position as counsel of the Lexow Commission failed. The first attempt was when Mr. Goff, accepted the position as counsel on the stipulation that he must be fully free in his conduct of the case. He

For ten years their domestic life was a happy one. Royall is connected with the Long Island Reef Co., and has a good income. Two children were born to them.

Four years ago, while they were visiting in Stamford, Conn., Royall's wife discovered that her husband was secretly meeting George Messersinger, who was in the exports business. She learned that he was going to Scotland, and is now secretary to Lady Francis Cooke, who used to be Victoria's godmother. Just before Royall's death she was offered Royall's job to serve by publication the other half of the salt for divorce.

CHIEF MAMEA DEAD.

One of the Celebrated Characters in Samoan History.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 6.—One of the first official acts of James H. Mulligan, our new Consul at Samoa, was to report under date of Sept. 12, the death at that place on Sept. 9 of Mamea, High Chief of Lefaga, and a celebrated character in Samoan history. The village of Lefaga of which he was hereditary chief, is within the district of Asua, which has been from almost the commencement of the recent war in open rebellion against the established Government of King Malietoa, and which he died Mamea was practically in exile because of his earnest loyalty to the King.

Mamea played a conspicuous part in the history of Samoa. He was the Samoan Plenipotentiary to Washington in 1878. When he concluded with Secretary Seward the treaty of friendship and commerce between the United States and Samoa, under which the rights of the United States to the harbor of Pago Pago was guaranteed and secured.

ONLY TWO YEARS.

The Terrible Charge of Which a Scott

County Judge Was Found Guilty.

CHARLESTON, Mo., Oct. 6.—L. D. Sibley, an ex-County Judge of Scott County and who had held the office of Justice of the Peace in that county near Commerce, was on trial in the Circuit Court of this county to-day on a charge of venue from Scott County where the case was tried about three years ago, resulting in a hung jury.

The charge against Mr. Sibley and the circumstances surrounding his alleged conduct are said to be the most remarkable ever recorded. Mr. Sibley is charged with having seduced his daughter, Lulu Lawrence, aged 19, with having killed her mother, and with having committed his illicit relations for a time extending over three years.

The girl who now lives at 2109 Walnut street, St. Louis, gave her evidence last evening and this morning. It was almost wholly unsupported, but a number of telling the horrible story carried conviction with it. The jury was out but an hour before returning a verdict of guilty and assessing Sibley's punishment at two years in the penitentiary.

CORBETT CAUSES A SCRAP.

Two Men Dispute About the Champion and Comp to Blows.

John A. Bowman, aged 28, and his brother, Adolph, aged 21, both agents for the Buffalo Scale Co., Fourth and Market streets, imbibed, it is said, a trifle too freely, and when at Thirtieth and Chestnut streets got into an argument over the pugilistic ability of champion James Corbett. The argument waxed so warm that blows were resorted to and when Officers Haley and Bunting came upon the scene the toilet of each of the combatants looked rather disarranged, their shirts being especially badly demolished both were arrested charged with disturbing the peace.

BOLD ROBBERY.

Mrs. Clarence Davenport Thrown Down and Robbed of Her Reticle.

Clarence Davenport and his wife of Elecia, Ark., were walking from the Moser Hotel to the Union Station last evening, and when they were passing the alley between Market and Chestnut on Eighteenth street a tall negro sprang from the alley and grabbed Mrs. Davenport's reticle. The cords of the reticle were so strong that Mrs. Davenport was thrown to the sidewalk, and before her husband could get to her she had escaped with the reticle. The negro succeeded in getting the bag and making his escape. The bag only contained about six cents in change.

HIGHWAYMEN FOILED.

Mrs. John Neidel Attacked While on the Way to Market.

On an early hour Saturday morning, Mrs. John Neidel, who lives in the first house east of Calvary avenue, on the Birch road, was driving into market with a load of vegetables and when she was passing King's highway and Natural Bridge road, some unknown man sprang out of a dark corner and attempted to grab the horse's bridle. The animal became frightened and ran away for several blocks and then Mrs. Neidel escaped the clutches of a supposed road agent. She can give no description of the man.

RANSOM TURNS UP.

Missing Promoter of the Round-the-World

Cruise Returns.

SOUTH HAVEN, Mich., Oct. 6.—E. P. Townsend, attorney for Dr. Ransom, the promoter of the "round-the-world" cruise, who so mysteriously disappeared when the expedition was ready to start, says he has had two letters from Dr. Ransom, written from Orlando, Fla.

Ransom writes that he left the company and their ship because he foresaw it would be wrecked by a very large number of people. The cattle were wild, and the sport more than usually dangerous and one man was seriously injured. Time of course, throwing and killing ranged from 1:15 to 1:35. All grades of cattle here had been sold from $2 to $5 a head during the past three weeks. The advance is attributed to the Japanese-China war creating demands for stock.

A ROPING CONTEST.

The Exciting Exhibition Given by Cowboys in Texas.

AUSTIN, Tex., Oct. 6.—The cowboys in this section had an exciting roping contest to-day. The match was witnessed by a very large number of people. The cattle were wild, and the sport more than usually dangerous and one man was seriously injured. Time of course, throwing and killing ranged from 1:15 to 1:35. All grades of cattle here had been sold from $2 to $5 a head during the past three weeks. The advance is attributed to the Japanese-China war creating demands for stock.

The marines were first established in 1808, when a corps was formed to supply trained sailors for the fleet. The merchant navy at that time was not large enough to supply the

NE PRUSSIAN ELECTORAL SYSTEM.
Prussian electoral system, dividing into three classes, according to the amount of taxes paid by each, is frequently cited as evidence of evil. Thus in Newstadt, 1, the first electoral class is wholly made up of three members of one big firm and two members of another. The members of the same firm. The result is this firm has alone elected twenty-four of a total of 100 members of the assembly, the population, represented by 1,231,381 votes, of whom only twelve of the aldermen, 367, are direct telephone company shareholders. The Parkersburg Explosion.
PARKERSBURG, W. Va., Oct. 6.—The results of the terrible explosion of Schultz's saw mill at Mineral well yesterday are worse than first reported. The bodies of Harry and George Schultz are both dead and Sam Cook and Sam cannot recover. Mayhew, the steam engine, and D. R. Sams, who were both hurt and scalded, are now believed to be internally injured. The engineer was killed and the boiler exploded, sending like a bomb a big stone down the shaft and down the safety.

Mr. Higgins said: "The Democratic party is a bimetallic party. It will take silver as good as gold. It will wear the gold and silver. The Republican party put itself upon record as the monometallic party. The Democratic party has picked up all the money that was left over from its pledges and it will keep it. What its pledges has failed to keep has been the fault of the Republicans. In the last election the Democratic party elected a senator talking nothing for six weeks. The Democratic party wants to stop this. It will represent the people, by the popular vote, as Abraham Lincoln, the best man we have."

criticism of the Action of Lord Wol-terton—The Britannia's Chances With the Vigilant Under Certain Conditions —Advantages of the Centerboard—Views of Prominent Yachtsmen in Response to Seven Questions Asked for Publication.

NEW YORK, Oct. 6.—Now that George Gould has returned it is a good time to let him know of the high esteem in which he and his brother are held by American yachtsmen.
Some of them expressed their opinions over their own signatures. The result is all in favor of these young men who have spared no expense to show yachtsmen all over the world that they were willing to sail races against the best boats in British waters, even though defeat stared them in the face many a time. Here are the questions asked and the replies given for publication in THE WORLD and SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH:

1. Do you consider that the owners of the Vigilant have had a fair chance to win races with their boat on the other side?
2. Was Gould right in sailing over the Clyde course, and do you think his action was purely sporting motives and a desire to learn which country owned the best boat?
3. Do you think that the loss of the center-board is an argument against the use of center boards in English waters?
4. Was it unportant to the part of Lord Wolterton to withdraw his cup before he knew whether the Vigilant could be repaired in time to race?
5. What chance would the Britannia have in a race with the Vigilant twenty miles to windward and return in a breeze that forced both to house-top masts and over an open course free from all tide influence?
6. Whose fault was it that the Vigilant struck on a rock, causing the center board accident?
7. Has George Gould properly represented the interests of American yachtsmen while abroad with the Vigilant?

Ex-Commodore Smith of the New York Yacht Club and Chairman of the American Cup Committee, has this to say:
"As I only have reports to read, which may not be correct, it is hard to give an opinion.
I cannot impute unfairness in the management of the committee having the races in hand on the other side. I do think it questionable whether it was good judgment to sail almost immediately into races on courses with which no American could contend, where there were headlands and strong tides, and where it was necessary to go over a course three or four times before we could expect to take time to put my boat into first-class condition and have made my races in the open sea. I do not believe the loss of the center board an argument against the use of center boards in any water. I think Mr. Gould's action was from sporting motives. I give him credit for desiring to win every race he entered. I do not know what the circumstances were why Lord Wolterton withdrew his cup. Mr. Gould has high opinion of him as a sportsman and gentleman. I think the chances would be in favor of the Vigilant being the winner, in answer to No. 1 question.

6. The pilot, if a strike struck a rock.
7. Mr. Gould is a young man and has not had the experience that many other older men have. I think he did his best to represent the interests of American yachtsmen in Europe. I give him great credit for his quick. If any man thinks he could have done better he will find out how hard it is to satisfy everyone.

Mr. Irving Fox says:
"While I feel that the poor showing made to be deplored, and that through it we have lost in a large degree the respect held for many years, I do not consider the hue and cry raised in this country against the Vigilant just. Gould bought what was considered the representative yacht of last year and took her to England to try to win in their own waters. Almost everyone thought that he would win more races than he lost and had no reason to expect anything would have gone on smoothly. The yachting world has been benefited by the experience of a slow-moving boat in English waters, and a better boat won or lost, he gives credit to the Vigilant. I consider the accusation that it is using the boat as a means of pulling himself into society rank as a slur on the Vigilant. Gould has a fair chance to win, I must say that I do not think so now, although I did when he started. Gould is a young man and perfectly right to race the boat wherever and whenever he could. The withdrawal of Wolterton's cup was proper, as the Vigilant was unable to race, and it was generally known that she could not be repaired in time. The Vigilant would defeat the Britannia in any water. The loss of the center board was a mechanical matter, and while it will undoubtedly add largely to the prejudice already existing among yachtsmen on the other side, it should not influence the racing world in any way against it.
The result of the plot, due to causing the Vigilant to strike a rock, was mitigated by the fact that it did not know it was doing and further by the fact that he had not sailed a yacht drawing over twenty feet in those waters.

Harold Sanderson says:
"Unquestionably yes.
1. I think he showed true sporting spirit.
2. I think that the recent developments point to the probability that the center board formerly claimed for the center board no longer exist. Undoubtedly the loss of the board is an argument against the use of it.
3. I am not familiar enough with the circumstances connected with the withdrawal of the cup to justify my answering.
4. In my opinion, under such a condition, the Vigilant would be beaten. Given the same conditions in landlocked waters I should expect the Vigilant to win.
5. I do not know.
6. Yes, so far as I have been informed.

W. P. Stephens says:
1. I consider that, save in the case of the Coral Breeze, the Vigilant received fair treatment, and has even been allowed some privileges that are denied to the home boats.
2. If, as I believe, Mr. Gould was right in sailing the representative yacht into the risk of regatta, then he was right in refusing to sail on the Clyde. The Vigilant to the allied lack of preparation, a yacht could be put into racing form by actual trial.
No more than in American waters. The great advantage of the center board, the Vigilant, is to instantly lessen the draft, distinctly, in an absolute draft of three feet, and the advantage of the center board out of the keel boat with an extreme draft but four feet more. The mishaps of the Vigilant's board offer a very strong argument against the use of "ballast boards" and of the old American wooden board of light weight.

Lord Wolterton's action as regarding racing under various conditions of occurrence, I do not consider that I know enough about the circumstances to qualifiedly express any opinion.
In a good breeze and sea, I think if it were in neutral water and lily far from home.

The fault lies with whoever was in command of the yacht at the time. No degree of genius in the ability and honesty of any man could justify such a needless risk in doing what he has done, and particularly in having undone some things which have marked the foreign cruise of other American yachtsmen in the past. I consider that Gould has proved himself a fitting type of the best of American yachtsmen.

John B. Lord says: 1. My belief is that the Vigilant had equal chances to win in all the outside races, but I think that the familiarity of the Captain of the Britannia with the courses were against the Vigilant.
I think Mr. Gould was not only right in sailing the Clyde races, but has placed all American yachtsmen under an obligation to him for having taught us by his experience what kind of a boat is required to sail in those waters.
2. I think the centerboard best in all waters. All other points being equal as to rise, trim and handling, especially with scientific use of the board, a centerboard would be the fittest.
3. My observations of Lord Wolterton when here lead me to hesitate to accuse him of being unsportsmanlike, and, with the evidence before the American yachtsmen, it is very difficult to determine the actual reasons which caused him to withdraw the cup.
4. I am convinced that the Vigilant would win three out of four races.
5. There is no doubt that the center board accident was the fault of the pilot.
6. The interests of American yachtsmen have been fairly represented by Mr. Gould, and my belief is that his experience will enable him to retain the America cup on this side of the water, and that, this having been done, the American yachtsmen will not be slow to acknowledge their obligation to Mr.
Gould.

WAS IT BLACKMAIL?

The Story of Attorney Delaney's Murder at Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N.Y., Oct. 6.—The trial of George
A. Bartholomew for the murder of ex-City Clerk Wm. Delaney on June 14, which was begun on Monday, has been the sensation of the week. The crime was one of the most startling in the city's criminal history. Delaney was a rising lawyer and a politician of prominence in the Democratic party. He became intimate with the wife of the prisoner, and on the afternoon of the murder she went to his rooms. There Bartholomew and a companion found them. Bartholomew declared that he demanded that Delaney sign an admission of his criminal intimacy with his wife, but instead of doing so, Delaney tried to attack him, and in the struggle the shot was fired. Assistant District Attorney Kenneth, in his address to the jury promised to prove that the prisoner urged and encouraged the intimacy for the purpose of gain. Mrs. Bartholomew, he said, was to induce Delaney to take her to his room on June 14; there her husband and Mrs. Thorner were to surprise them, and Delaney was to be made to pay over a handsome sum as the price of silence. The plan, the District Attorney said, was carried out, and Delaney found himself in a trap. Bartholomew demanded Delaney's watch and money, and the latter gave them up. He then demanded a diamond pin which had belonged to Delaney's dead wife. He objected, giving it up and Bartholomew insisted. Then Delaney became angry and said: "You will never get it." He sprang for the door to escape. Bartholomew, who had a revolver levelled at Delaney, pulled the trigger and the ball took effect in Delaney's body. Then the murderer and his companion fled.
The District Attorney then called Mrs.
Bartholomew. She is a beautiful young woman 17 years of age, and when she took the stand she appeared to be overcome with fright. When she came to describe the terrible scene of the tragedy, she corroborated all the District Attorney had said. She told of going with Delaney to his room and swore she signalled to the others to follow. She told of the rap on the door and the command, "Open the door!" in her husband's voice, and then the entrance of her husband and Mrs. Thorner. She continued:
"Will there be any trouble? Then he opened the door and my husband and Mrs. Thorner entered. My husband pulled a revolver and pointed it at Delaney and told him to sit down. Delaney gave him his watch and money. My husband asked if he had anything else and he said only $50 in the bank. When Delaney was writing the check my husband asked him for his diamond pin. Then Delaney jumped up and said: 'I am going to get out of this.'
I heard the shot and saw my husband run out, grabbing his coat and vest. Delaney staggered to me and said: 'I am dead.' I said 'No.' I thought they were blank cartridges. Delaney fell and struck his head on a chair. Then a man entered the room and I went out with Mrs. Thorner." Attorney Ashley, for the defense, began the cross examination. Witness said she knew Delaney since she was 12 years old.
They used to be neighbors. She called on him first at his office to solicit his assistance in procuring employment for her husband.
That was in the winter of 1893. He got him work as a watchman, but he did not like it, and she suggested that he should find something better. She did not know exactly what winter. She next called in the following August when her husband was injured in an elevator. She thought that damages might be obtained for the injuries.
She said that she visited him in the winter in search of employment for her husband, and he got him a place in the office of the city of Buffalo in connection with the water works. She told of her husband's death on May 16 and of her telling her husband about it.
"Did you tell your husband that you had not consented and that he overpowered you?"
"Yes sir."
"Was it true?"
"Yes."
"What was your husband's condition after that? Did he seem affected by what you told him?"
"Not much."
"Do you mean to say that you were not willing to come over to get the proof against Delaney on the day of the shooting?"
"I was willing."
"Wasn't it true that you wanted to shield Delaney?"
"Yes."
She was then examined as to the various movements on the day including the time when Delaney asked her to his room. Delaney went first to the room, in about twenty minutes there was a knock on the door. When Bartholomew first came in she got on her knees and asked him not to do anything. Then she went over to Mrs.
Thorner, who pushed her away and said she wanted nothing to do with her. Delaney sat down in the rocking chair.
"While he was sitting in the chair did he say: 'Now, George, of course you won't live with this young woman any longer, I will give you enough money to go away.' Did not Delaney say that?"
"Yes."
"And did your husband say that he would go away and the further he went the better he would like it?"
"Yes sir."
Witness said she was standing near the window when she heard a noise and saw Delaney with his hand on the door and her husband with a smoking revolver in his hand.
The cross-examination failed to shake her story.
When the defense opened the counsel took the position that even according to the evidence adduced there was no proof of blackmail, but that Bartholomew merely tried to compel Delaney to do the right thing by the woman he had wronged. He said Delaney's coat showed that when he was shot he was so close to Bartholomew that the powder burned the cloth and left powder marks on it. Bartholomew was described as a weak-minded epileptic who had been driven to desperation by his wife's unfaithfulness and who was acting in self defense.

FOOD AND GARNISH.
The Most Popular Novellists Dine Much Like Ordinary Folk.

From the Saturday Record.
It is extremely improbable that genius derives any peculiarly appropriate nutriment from a fish diet, and it is certain that genius gives no thought to the subject. Mr.
Carlyle and Lord Teasdale smoked pipes—but we do not suppose that cigarettes would have made a decadent of Mr. Carlyle or an "impressionist" of Mr. Johnson Bayouids.

The style and character of Mr. Johnson remained the same, whether he drank lemonade and tea or port and punch.
Old catches holdy avers that brandy makes the poet, but his poetry would have had the same complexion had he regaled his musse with whisky. On champagne and ornament Burns would have been no better better nor worse than on colic. day. In another feat of excellent smoke a pipe and drink a not said or subtract a coup

Taylor's usual round on the links. It was not because of his great appetite for beef that Sir Andrew Agasscheek fell below a lofty intellectual standard. We do not know whether Shakespeare had any favorite dish.
About Thackeray's and Johnson's favorite dishes we know a great deal, but are psychologically none the wiser. Appreciation of cockle does not account for the statesmanlike qualities or defects of James VI.
Whatever Sir Gladstone's favorite food may be it is probably none of the rough and ready dainties celebrated by Homer, and it is not to be thought that he takes credit these in his claret, like Nestor. In short, food and genius have nothing to do with each other, and the most popular novellists are not to be distinguished at dinner time from mere critics.

"Two weeks ago I saw a car load of chickens in Alabama," said T. L. Hollinshead, and in Alabama," said T. L. Hollinshead.
"The remarkable thing about it was that the chickens were all from one day to three days old. Among the freight in a local car was a basket of eggs which had in some way been overlooked, and the car remained on the site track for a number of days. It was then picked up as an empty and taken into Selma, where, upon its arrival, a number of small chickens were seen toddling about the floor.

In fact, enough to be called a car load. In very hot weather it is not infrequent to find eggs on the point of hatching. Every commission merchant has had such experiences, but the Alabama incident is the only one of the kind that I ever heard of."

at the Music Hall meeting. Such a generous outpouring of money has been rarely known in connection with any public appeal. A list of 4,000 requests for subscription that were sent out by the Finance Committee there were not more than half a dozen that were returned without a check. Not only the business men, but the clerks, the mechanics and in fact men in every vocation and condition contributed to the fund that was to help glorify St. Louis before the world.

THE ACHIEVEMENTS. How well the Festivities Association performed the arduous duties they so willingly assumed is well known to every citizen of St. Louis. The magnificent carnivals, the brilliant illuminations, the grand receptions and countless other attractions that brought hundreds of thousands of strangers to the city will never be forgotten and there is a lasting monument to the seal and enterprise of the association in the magnificent new hotel that has been recently opened to the public, toward the building of which the association donated $100,000.

Not one of the greatest and most beneficial achievements of the association was accomplished by the Bureau of Information, under the efficient management of its secretary, Mr. James Corcoran. LAND OF THISTLE.

The People of Scotland Will Enjoy the Ex. To-Morrow.

SOUSA WILL GIVE A SPECIAL PROGRAMME OF SCOTCH AIRS.

Last Week Was One of the Most Successful in the History of the Exposition—The Living Pictures Will Again Be Given the Evening Week—Features of the Show.

Last night closed one of the most successful weeks in the history of the Exposition. A large proportion of the immense crowd of strangers that came to the city to attend the Fair found time to visit the Exposition, and the interest they displayed in viewing the exhibits and the hearty manner in which they applauded the concerts and living pictures was evidence that they felt well repaid for the time spent within the building. According to Manager Gallenale fully 125,000 people visited the Exposition during the week, which is largely in advance of the number who attended during the corresponding week of last year.

Yesterday was A. O. U. W. Day and a large number of the members of that organization were in attendance last evening. The stage was last night devoted to the Scotch airs of the various councils, upon which, after the first evening concert were ranged a number of the officials of the order, several of whom made short addresses.

Manager Gallenale said that he expected an unusually large attendance during the coming week. Although the living pictures have made his audience increased day by day, yet a large number of the residents of the city have so far failed to see the pictures. He has been filled with the desire to show the entire week and that they would of course throng to see such a beautiful attraction. A large number of citizens have waited until the crowd of visitors departed from their homes, rather than be crowded and jostled about in the immense throng which has filled the building every day during the last week. This will be the last of the living pictures. The programme has been varied and two new pictures added.

It was announced by the management of the Exposition yesterday that "Sunday-school Day," which was to have been held on Oct. 12, would be observed as "English Day" instead. The change was made because of the fact that the same day was also the day of the "Highland Fling," and it was deemed better to have the English day on a different day. The programme for "Sunday-school Day" will be given on the stage, both afternoon and evening. It will consist of a concert of English songs, and a play, "The English Boy," which is a story of a boy who was captured by the pirates and sold into slavery. The programme for "English Day" will be given on the stage, both afternoon and evening. It will consist of a concert of English songs, and a play, "The English Boy," which is a story of a boy who was captured by the pirates and sold into slavery.

To-morrow will be "Scotch Day" and it is expected to be a big success. Director Sousa has prepared a special programme in honor of the occasion, every number of which is composed of a Scotchman, an old Scotch ballad or inspired by a Scotch subject. The programme for the concert to-morrow afternoon and evening and also for the display of the living pictures throughout the week is as follows:

1. Overture—"The Flamingo." 2. "The Flamingo." 3. "The Flamingo." 4. "The Flamingo." 5. "The Flamingo." 6. "The Flamingo." 7. "The Flamingo." 8. "The Flamingo." 9. "The Flamingo." 10. PEDAGOGUE'S PLANS

The Society Will Extend Its Work This Winter.

SCIENCE OF EDUCATION, NOT METHODS, TO BE CONSIDERED.

Leaders of the Different Sections Outline the Work in their Departments—The Art Section Subdivided—Addresses on the Main Topics.

Yesterday morning the sections of the Society of Pedagogy met in the class-rooms of the new high school building. The sections of pedagogy, psychology, ethics and art (sub section A) at 9:30 and those of history, science and art (sub section B) at 10:45. The attendance upon all the sections was most excellent and great interest in the work was manifested by both leaders and members. The chief business of the morning was the organization of the classes, the giving out of membership tickets, the exposition of the plans of the different courses accompanied by an introductory lecture. In the section of pedagogy, after organizing his class, Mr. F. E. Cook, by way of introduction, stated that while it was his intention to aid the comprehension of the principles of pedagogy, by the application of the scientific method to the work of the school, both in discipline and instruction, it must not be forgotten that the sole purpose of the Society of Pedagogy was the unfolding and study of the science of education and not the discussion of methods. But he thought that, after all, that which would be of the greatest service to the teacher was a clear, high and correct apprehension of the true end of education, for with the end clearly in view, the means would be quite likely to take care of themselves, in the hands of persons reasonably well equipped for the work of teaching.

The work of the section would, therefore, begin with a consideration of the nature, form and limits of education. Its nature was best expressed by the term self-determination, which could be attributed only to conscious beings, who were distinguished from the lower animals in the possessing of ideals and the power and inclination of realizing the same. This form of self-realization he called self-education, and pronounced it the most important concept in the science of education. It is produced by action in the form of work and play, which he defined, and thought it best to leave the definition of the nature of play to the philosopher. Though good in their place, we should never work as if playing or play as if working. That might be the motto of a philosopher, but nature for defense against that which is external to it, or for attack upon, and conquest of, the same. Corporal punishment he advocated for the young, but not for the adult, and considered suspension as practiced in our schools as probably the best means yet devised for correction through isolation.

The limit of action might be subjective, dependent on natural capacity, or objective, on accident or circumstance (such as wealth, etc.), but it is a limit which has reached the point of self-help, thus canceling the distinction between the teacher and the taught.

Under the head of varieties of education, physical culture is to be considered at the next meeting. After the organization of the section and the giving out of membership tickets, the plan of his course, Mr. F. E. Long said: Psychology deals with mind and its phenomena. There are two methods of studying this phenomena: By giving attention to the activity of thought within one's self, noticing the processes and observing the results; or by observing the external manifestations of mind as outwardly expressed through the physical organism. The one deals mostly with the internal mind-processes, the other with the external world and by which it expresses itself externally. The one is internal observation, or introspection; the other, external observation.

External or outward observation can give us only a knowledge of material things and their environment. Internal observation notices the activity of the mind and endeavors to be an energy. Energy comes to be defined as "capacity of acting, operating, producing an effect." That which produces an effect must be cause or the self-activity. The leading thought that must be kept in view in the study of mind is that of self-activity. When we observe the mind, the fact is gained it is not difficult to see self-activity individualized in the organic world.

The mind, being self-active, must originate, and therefore, will be self-active. Ideas—time, space and causality—that make experience with the external world possible, are not external to the mind, but are products of this self-activity. They are symbolized in language and form the basis of our thinking. The mind, being self-active, is self-determining, as well as all that may be called science in connection with the mind, with the external world, have their source in the self-activity of mind.

The subject has been briefly reviewed were elaborated in the studies of last year. With this preparation the proper beginning of the study of mind from the physiological standpoint—external observation. The nervous system, its various divisions, its structure, composition and function was described sufficiently to form a basis for considering the relation of mind to body.

After the section of Ethics had met and organized, Mr. Wm. M. Bryant gave a general survey of the subject, as follows:

The essence of ethics is to prove the contrary is impossible. For such proof itself would be possible only as a manifestation of mind. All directions are towards the mind, such relations again have their inner or subjective aspect as well as their outer or objective aspect. The inner aspect of these relations assumes positive definition in the nature of the mind, and in the form of social institutions in the widest sense of the term.

But these outer forms are nothing else than the organic embodiment of the inner substance of mind. They constitute the framework, so far as this process is concerned, of the essential relations of man to man, constitutes the science of ethics. Hence in this year's study of ethics attention will be given chiefly to the typical forms in which the consciousness of the race has given expression to its ethical principles, deriving principles of human conduct. Of these typical forms there are three characteristic groups:

1. The first group consists of forms, in the evolution of which the imagination is the dominant factor. These are the myths, legends, fables, etc., which are the basis of the various religions and ethical systems of the world. 2. The second group consists of forms, in the evolution of which the imagination is the dominant factor. These are the myths, legends, fables, etc., which are the basis of the various religions and ethical systems of the world. 3. The third group consists of forms, in the evolution of which the imagination is the dominant factor. These are the myths, legends, fables, etc., which are the basis of the various religions and ethical systems of the world.

The section of History was assembled under Mr. Geo. E. Seymour's leadership, who opened his course with the following introductory remarks:

The field of historical study had now become so vast and so diversified that it was necessary to resort to some scheme of selection in order that the student might be able to grasp the essential principles of the subject. The history of the world, as a whole, is a story of the struggle for existence, and the history of the United States is a story of the struggle for freedom.

Looking at history as a whole it is marked by two general movements. The one is a movement from the past to the present, and the other is a movement from the present to the future. The first movement is the history of the past, and the second is the history of the future.

The subject of the history of the United States is a story of the struggle for freedom. The history of the United States is a story of the struggle for freedom, and the history of the United States is a story of the struggle for freedom.

Practically, the two groups, the Lacon Group and the Apollo Group, were the same. The Lacon Group, which was the more numerous, was the more active, and the Apollo Group, which was the more exclusive, was the more passive.

The section of History was assembled under Mr. Geo. E. Seymour's leadership, who opened his course with the following introductory remarks:

The field of historical study had now become so vast and so diversified that it was necessary to resort to some scheme of selection in order that the student might be able to grasp the essential principles of the subject.

Looking at history as a whole it is marked by two general movements. The one is a movement from the past to the present, and the other is a movement from the present to the future. The first movement is the history of the past, and the second is the history of the future.

HE WAS A BURGLAR.

But the Boy Friends of Charles Willis Thought Him a Prince.

ONE OF THE QUEEREST CRIMINALS THE ST. LOUIS POLICE EVER HANDLED.

Willis Had Bachelor Apartments in Which He Entertained His Young Friends on the Proceeds of His Daily Robberies—They Were Ignorant of His True Character.

Police interference has stopped a most interesting career of crime. If the officers of the law had not let Charles Willis alone there is no telling what picturesque idiosyncrasies he might have indulged himself in. He might even have become a Faustin, for his talents for successful law-breaking were quite remarkable, and he had other, less conspicuous, characteristics of Dickens' great criminal. Perhaps he would have degenerated into only an ordinary crook, but in his present state, as a criminal chrysalis, he is worthy of more than a passing glance.

The most prominent feature in the young thief's character was his natural philanthropy. He worked along the same line with Jesse James, who robbed the rich to keep the poor. Willis was so generous with his ill-gotten gains and had such a desire to aid and befriended the needy, that he was soon known as "the good fellow" among the homeless cab that he not only divided the all together, playing cards, telling stories and eating their host's cheese and crackers. It looks strange, but it appears to be true that Charles Willis was a philanthropist. One reason for this was that he did all of his jobs during the daytime. When he got up in the morning he would tell the boys who had followed him by remaining all night at his place that he was going out to look for work. He would appear again at night without a job, but with plenty of money. So long as they saw nothing to arouse their suspicions they forgot all about inquiring as to how he got this money.

But this dream of happiness was doomed to dissipation. Willis' philanthropic ideas were shortly to be easily modified by the police. A policeman arrested him Wednesday morning on suspicion, and he confessed everything. Then the officers searched the club. They found Cornelius Sullivan, William and Eugene Hagan and Edna. Hagan was the scoundrel of youngsters in St. Louis. Willis' pocket. When he saw the policeman he jumped through the second story window, landing feet first on a cellar door below. The door gave way and Hagan went down and he hit the cellar door, jumping to his feet he rushed out the other entrance and escaped. The rest of the boys were captured and locked up.

PREPARE THE FEEL. As soon as Willis heard of his imprisonment he began to do his best to set them free. He swears that they know nothing whatever of his doings.

"Why, I wouldn't have trusted one of them with a nickel," he said. "I just wanted company, that's all the reason I had 'em about. They were nice fellows and made the time pass when I didn't have a job on hand."

Willis' residence, 868 Page avenue, is a modest affair. He is a young man, about 25 years of age, with a natural aversion to believing crooks, although they may be confessing, believed him. All the boys were left go, even to Willis.

proceeds of his spoils he shared his bed and board. And the peculiar thing about all this was that the recipient of his bounty were not aware that the money came from any other than a legitimate source.

Willis is now only 18 years old. He has lived in St. Louis since his early childhood. He is a handsome fellow with curly dark hair and eyes and something of an olive tinted skin. His figure is trim and neat and his hands are small and well cared for. Not on man in a hundred would imagine for a moment that he was a crook.

His mother almost white and his father was a pure Caucasian. For some time now he has been married to a colored woman named Imogene and he did not care for this white child of his wife and drove him out of the house.

Then it was that Young Willis began to steal. Twice he was caught and sent to the work-house. The last time he went down he received sentence of seventy-five days. He got out after two months ago, but Col. Lohrum's careful tutelage had been wasted. He kept right on with his thieving. So fortunate was he in his ventures that he decided to quit his lodging-house life and take apartment life of his own. It was through this move that the true nature of the boy cropped out.

His choice of his quarters two rooms in the rear of 109½ Franklin avenue. They were on the second floor and faced the alley. He hired these rooms two weeks ago, purchased a bed, washstand, table, bureau, five chairs, a couple of lamps and some rugs. He made a splendid job of it as possible, and the walls were white washed and furnished with a few pictures and a few other things. He had a good fire in the stove and a good fire in the stove and a good fire in the stove.

A PRACTICAL LIFE GUARD.

It Would Have Been Useful in St. Louis During the Past Week.

Written for the SUNDAY POST-DISPATCH. It has been more evident than it is now that some sort of safe guard or body catcher, a practical and useful kind necessary on every motor car and grip car in the city.

There have been many lives lost of late and people who have not been knocked off by the cars and trucks and flying car have been crushed under the wheels in a most painfully ghastly manner. The so-called guards have been found of but little service, and in several instances the victims have been crushed under the wheels in a most painfully ghastly manner. Grand Commander Dr. G. W. Carson and staff instituted a new council of the American Legion of Honor at Arlio Station, corner of Ivanhoe and McCune avenues, last Monday evening. The following officers were elected and installed: Commander, Ed L. Gottschalk; Vice-Commander, H. W. Fairchild; Past Commander, John V. Blank; Orator, Robinson; Secretary, Clemens H. Laessle; Collector, August F. Kleinschmidt; Treasurer, Ed B. Nace; Chaplain, John S. Johnson; Guide, Alex. N. Anderson; Warden, J. Schriek; Sentry, Ed W. Lee; Trustees, Lena N. Robinson, Selma G. McMurray and Alex. N. Anderson.

Future Council, No. 1,885, had a good time at the last meeting over the celebration of their tenth anniversary. The boys enjoyed themselves until a late hour with singing, dancing and speechmaking. Col. John A. Logan was absent; he was celebrating his thirty-fifth wedding day.

North St. Louis will celebrate its two hundredth anniversary on Wednesday evening, Oct. 10, with a grand lunch and entertainment. All chosen friends are invited.
